SPECIAL ISSUE THEME

This call for papers focuses on Marketing and consumer behavior in the digital Environment. Marketing knowledge has been moving from traditional off-line to digital on-line environments (Appel, Grewal, Hadi, & Stephen, 2020). In this new landscape, marketers as well as consumers deal with mobile platforms (Lamberton & Stephen, 2016), online review (Chintagunta, Gopinath, & Venkataraman, 2020), fan in social media (De Vries, Gensler, & Leeflang, 2012), e-mail marketing, electronic marketplaces, new cultural discourses (Ravenelle, 2020), narratives, influencers (Almeida, Coelho, Camilo-Junior, & Godoy, 2018), digital brands (Demo, Silva, Watanabe, & Scussel, 2018) arrangements and groups, and other elements inside the echoverse structure (Nascimento & Beuren, 2011).

From firms' perspective, marketers need to comprehend how their strategies relate to marketing performance measures in the digital arena and across multiple simultaneous digital channels (mobile, phone, internet) that aim to increase observable measures, such as sales and cross-channel (Dinner, Van Heerde, & Neslin, 2014), eWOM, purchase, as well as engagement measures (likes, shares etc.) and other relevant key performance indicators. From the society perspective, marketplace cultures (subcultures, brand communities, consumers' crowds, etc.) (Arnould & Thompson 2005), regulations, consumer culture (Cochoy, Hagberg, McIntyre, & Sörum, 2017; Denegri-Knott & Molesworth, 2010), construction of markets, market normative practices, and market (re) building are reshaping new ways of experience (Kozinets, 2019). From the consumers' perspective (Jain, Belk, Ambika, & Pathak-Shelat, 2021; Kozinets & Gambetti, 2020), consumer identity, collective identifications, symbolic means, creative and collaborative economy (Scaraboto, 2017) and other elements are developing a distinctive body of theoretical knowledge in understanding new decisions and life-style in digital marketing (Kannan & Li, 2017).

The editors are looking to publish leading-edge papers with a different range of methodologies, theories, concepts, models and applications on any aspect of marketing and consumer behavior in the digital environment. The special issue aims to publish “outside the box” papers that challenges the status quo and current mainstream.

In addition, the Journal of Contemporary Administration (RAC) and the Editors have no preferable methodologies and are open to qualitative (including [N]ethnography, case studies, focus group, narratives, and interviews), quantitative (panel and time series data, experimental design, surveys, meta-analysis), theoretical and critical reviews, and historical approaches.

A list of themes for publication in the Journal of Contemporary Administration (RAC) Special Issue might include, but are not be limited to:

In addition, RAC, through its editorial scope, prioritizes works that explore themes relevant to society. To do so, it uses the themes highlighted in the UN Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs). RAC is a pluralistic and unorthodox business journal in the field of management research, primarily concerned with issues relating to the links between strategy and competitive management, and provides research findings on systems and standards, corporate management tools, organizations and management, specific industry sectors, and answers to contemporary issues such as development, community resilience, inequality, consumption, technology, and climate change.
